The Policy Statement implements the requirements under the German Supply Chain Due Diligence Act ("SCDDA"). Merz reviews the effectiveness of this Policy Statement on the Human Rights Strategy as well as all the measures described hereunder on a regular and ad hoc basis and improves them whenever required.

2. Umwelt und Nachhaltigkeit

“Sustainable development” is a globally accepted approach to sustaining economic growth without harming our planet or depleting its resources, while at the same time improving the quality of life of present and future generations. This means delivering innovative solutions, providing a rewarding work place, proving to be a trustworthy partner, and supporting the regions and communities in which we operate. The Merz Group has been committed to improving the lives of our customers and patients for over 100 years.

Protecting the environment is an important objective for the Merz Group. Sustainable growth that ensures environmental protection, the conservation of natural resources, and thus respect for the living conditions of future generations is a high priority for the Merz Group. The Merz Group therefore respects the human rights and livelihoods of the local people. The Merz Group will not cause harmful soil alteration, water or air pollution, harmful noise emission or excessive water consumption that would significantly impair the natural basis for the preservation and production of food, impede access to sanitation, or harm a person’s health. Likewise, the Merz Group will not carry out unlawful evictions or unlawful deprivation of land, forests and waters, whose use secures a person’s livelihood.

Merz is aware of the scarcity of resources and its responsibility towards future generations. Merz aligns its business dealings accordingly and ensures that all Businesses and companies comply with our sustainability standards. This applies to the entire supply chain from production to distribution of products and refers to any and all activities that could harm the environment. This includes, without being limited thereto, the careful and responsible handling of (i) mercury, products containing mercury and mercury waste, (ii) persistent organic

III. Our approach to the protection of human rights and the environment

1. Implementing measures for effective risk management

(a) Risk management

Identifying risks and their potential impact as well as developing appropriate and effective measures to counter these are core elements of fulfilling human rights and environmental due diligence obligations.

The different business functions work together to manage these risks. We have created the corresponding functions, responsibilities and structures in order to

- identify, weight and prioritise our human rights risks and environmental risks by means of regular analyses and ad hoc analyses whenever required,
- address such risks by means of appropriate and effective preventive measures and, in case of violations, by means of appropriate remedial measures,
- integrate these measures in all relevant functions and operational processes, and
- regularly review the effectiveness of our preventive and remedial measures as well as our complaint mechanism.

This way, we ensure that we can appropriately react to human rights and environmental risks whenever required.

Our Group Compliance Officer also acts as our “SCDDA Officer”, monitoring the corresponding overall risk management system and reporting regularly and ad hoc, whenever required, to the management of the Merz Group on our human rights and environment-related activities and the corresponding measures as well as other matters. The specialist functions in the individual Businesses work together closely to achieve the objectives specified in this Policy Statement. The international groupwide purchase organisation has established a global, risk-based management system in order to implement appropriate due diligence processes in the upstream supply chain.

Our company's internal control system and audits by our Internal Audit team at the individual business units are our main tools for ensuring and monitoring the implementation of the measures developed in the risk management system

(b) Risk analysis

We carry out appropriate risk analyses with regard to human rights and environmental obligations in our Businesses and our supply chain. Based on the findings of the risk analysis and an appropriate prioritisation, additional measures are implemented using a risk-based approach. Both the risk analysis and the prioritisation must be documented and archived in accordance with the legal provisions.

We strive to constantly further develop the risk analysis process and our understanding of human rights and environmental risks in our supply chain.

Own business area

In our own business area, we analyse risks with the assistance of the relevant business units that provide their assessment of the risks inherent in the area they are in charge of. All subsidiaries have undergone a standardised risk analysis. The risks thus identified are appropriately prioritised on the basis of the legal criteria.

Supply Chain

The risk analysis is based on an assessment of the direct suppliers, especially with regard to country of origin and sector of the delivered products. The findings thus gained are subjected to both an internal evaluation and a plausibility check regarding the individual suppliers, and existing knowledge is also applied. Thereafter, the identified risks are appropriately prioritised on the basis of the legal criteria.

This risk analysis process is carried out on a regular basis and when required (ad hoc) in accordance with the legal provisions.

With regard to indirect suppliers, we carry out a risk analysis if we have factual indications that a violation of human rights or environmental obligations by an indirect suppliers may potentially exist (substantiated knowledge). For this process, we use our compliance risk management system.

(c) Preventive measures

Whenever risks are identified and classified as priority risks, we immediately implement appropriate and effective preventive measures in our own business area (for instance with regard to procurement strategies and purchasing practices) and monitor them using a risk-based approach. The goal of these measures is to prevent or mitigate such risks. Here, we rely on the Guidelines by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) for Multinational Enterprises among other standards. The Merz Group's Code of Conduct (Merz Group Code of Conduct) reflects this goal and obliges all employees to comply with these requirements.

Whenever a risk is identified with regard to direct suppliers, appropriate preventive measures must be developed without undue delay for such direct suppliers, and the implementation of these measures must be controlled using a risk-based approach. We have implemented a supplier onboarding process that takes account of human rights and environmental aspects. The risk assessment plays a role when deciding on supplier onboarding.

We have implemented a Code of Conduct for business partners (Merz Third Party Code of Conduct) as a contractual preventive measure.

Further, depending on the results of the risk analysis, our contracts with the respective suppliers contain special provisions to address or mitigate the risk of human rights or environmental violations.

In order to build up the relevant competences we rely on a specialised training concept for both our suppliers and business partners as well as our employees. The goal is to familiarise our employees and suppliers with the human rights strategy and the relevant policies and to ensure these are applied. Existing employee training concepts are amended to include the obligations under the Supply Chain Due Diligence Act where required. Depending on their responsibilities, employees are furthermore trained with regard to the preventive measures or how they are to be adapted. Our Merz Third Party Code of Conduct and special training options assist our suppliers and business partners and raise awareness among their staff. For us, this is part of our endeavours to build up long-term and trusting relationships with our suppliers. We are convinced that this is the best way to counter any human rights or environmental risks that may exist.

If we gain substantiated knowledge of a violation of human rights or environmental obligations by an indirect supplier, we will also take appropriate preventive measures in this respect, thereby also supporting our indirect suppliers in fulfilling their human rights or environmental obligations.

The Global Strategic Sourcing department or the owner of the contractual relationship is responsible for implementing the preventive measures. The SCDDA Officer is responsible for monitoring the implementation of these preventive measures.

(d) Remedial measures

We have a zero tolerance policy with regard to the violation of human rights or environmental obligations. If we gain knowledge of potential violations of human rights or environmental obligations in our Businesses or at one of our direct suppliers or of violations of the Merz Third Party Code of Conduct, we will investigate the facts without undue delay and, where required, will initiate appropriate remedial measures in order to prevent such violations, end them or mitigate their effects.

In our own Businesses, such remedial measures must result in the prevention or ending of the violation. Whenever there is a risk of violations at direct suppliers, we will urge the persons responsible for procurement and the affected suppliers to develop a plan for remedial measures without undue delay and a timeline for ending or mitigating (or preventing) the effects, and to monitor the sustainable implementation of such measures if the business relationship is to be continued. Our objective is always to end the violation without undue delay. Whenever possible or expedient, we will participate in developing industry standards or take part in industry-led initiatives in order to increase our ability to influence the entity responsible for a risk or violation and strive to develop a solution together with our direct suppliers. As a last resort, we expressly reserve the right to consider possible alternatives and to terminate supplier relationships if our standards are seriously violated over a longer period of time. Termination of the business relationship will be considered in particular, where

- rights are violated in a particularly serious manner,
- violations have not been remedied by measures taken within a set period of time,
- here is no obvious milder course of action and exerting our influence does not seem promising.

If we gain substantiated knowledge of a (imminent) violation at an indirect supplier, we develop a concept to prevent, end or mitigate the effects of human rights or environmental violations and strive to implement such concept together with the direct suppliers.

(e) Complaint mechanism

Merz offers all employees and all external third parties protected channels to report violations against external or internal rules, including human rights or environmental risks and violations of human rights or environmental obligations which have arisen as a result of the economic activities of Merz or its direct or indirect suppliers.

With its compliance reporting system, Merz provides a groupwide, transparent, public and easily accessible grievance mechanism. Via this safe channel, reports can be made at any time in more than 50 languages both by phone or online and, if required, anonymously. A third party operator is responsible for the technical aspects of the grievance reporting system. The contents of the reports are processed only by us. All reports are reviewed and treated fairly and impartially. The persons in charge are independent and not subject to any instructions when handling the reports.

All reports of potential violations that are received are processed in line with a procedure that is binding across the entire group. The reporter gets confirmation when the report has been received. The report is discussed with the reporter. The identity of the reporter is kept confidential.

When a violation is made evident, we will take appropriate remedial measures as well as appropriate disciplinary measures. We do not tolerate any retaliation against reporters or anyone who submits a grievance and endeavour to prevent such retaliation by means of group-wide awareness training. Any violations of this prohibition will be treated as compliance violations. The rules of procedure as well as additional information are available at Ethics.Merz.com.

(f) Documentation and reporting

Documentation and reporting are governed by the legal requirements. The SCDDA Officer reports regularly and ad hoc, whenever required, to the management on compliance with the human rights, environmental and other obligations under the SCDDA. The annual reports to be submitted by Merz pursuant to Sec. 10 SCDDA are published on the global Merz website at www.merz.com.

2. Priority human rights and environmental risks

In our supply chain, we are exposed in particular to risks in the fields of occupational safety, environmental protection and health issues. We analyse and address these risks by means of established processes for responsible procurement and use our contractual relationships and our influence in an appropriate manner to best address these risks. If we detect such risks at certain suppliers, we will first evaluate these internally, discuss them with the supplier in question and address them by means of adequate measures, such as training or contractual agreements.

3. What we expect of our employees and suppliers

Merz strives to develop a corporate culture that fosters the protection of human rights and the environment and avoids violations thereof throughout its supply chain.

We are convinced that accepting responsibility for protecting human rights and a holistic approach to environmental protection are crucial factors for our company's long-term success and therefore expect all our employees and suppliers to adhere to these principles. The Merz Code of Conduct specifically highlights our commitment to the protection of human rights and the environment and emphasises that Merz exercises and wants to exercise whatever influence it has in this respect.

We expect our suppliers – like the Merz Group – to be committed to respecting human rights and the environment, to establishing appropriate due diligence processes and to passing these principles on to their own suppliers to the best of their ability. The Merz Third Party Code of Conduct governs our dealings with suppliers and our specific expectations in detail. This Merz Third Party Code of Conduct is part of our standard procurement agreements and our General Terms and Conditions of Purchase.
